

This book sheds light on the deepest feelings of survival which are universal and part of all the wars and battles of the world by asking many questions. The first and fundamental question is the one of motive and sense: "when the people were dying, someone was winning, winning what? And for what?" The second is that of brutality and violence: "The army taught us to emphasize anger—anger is both fuel and courage." The third one is the feeling of guilt because you survived, and your friends did not, even if you do not know if life in the hell of memories is a reward or a punishment. Ivana Sucec, Croatian Parliament member This book is a warm and beneficial reading recommendation to all war veterans, ...to their family members so they can understand ...and help them conquer this evil disease, and most importantly to the psychiatrists and those whose duty it is to help the ones suffering from PTSD, and as a thorough textbook for understanding the condition of the ones suffering from the "cancer of the soul." Predrag Matic Fred Retired veteran, POW, Author, Recipient of the highest merits for courage and contribution in the Civil War of Croatia
